In terms of living in the boarding house, at first it was hard due to the unfamiliar environment but all in all I never felt uncomfortable. Days after I found myself used to living and came up with some new hobbies to satisfy my boredom.

Weeks passed by and I don't feel different because my daily routine is going to work, going home and sleeping. This is my everyday life, I barely stay at the BH since I was working from monday to saturday so I guess that makes it easier for me to adapt since I don't feel the boarding house at all.

In terms of living with my roommates, since all of us are men then there's no trouble at all. We barely talk to each other since we have a diverse schedule and when we can have a conversation then it's not that long because after a minute we just go to sleep.

Talking about cleanliness, we observe cleanliness in our room. Every Saturday and Sunday we clean our room and if one of us gets bored on weekdays then he initiates to clean the room. Overall there's no problem.

For the location, it is too far and we had trouble going to the office. The Indian food stinks and it really annoys me because I have to cover my nose whenever I go inside the compound. However in terms of safety, all I can say is you can leave your belongings outside the room and go wherever you want, and when you come back? Rest assured that your belongings are still in the place where you leave it.

All in all, boarding house life isn't bad at all. It made me wise in terms of decision making and that's great because it will train me to be ready for the near future after graduation.
